Case Study

After nearly 20 years in Queen Street, Terry Laybourne has recently moved his critically acclaimed Café 21 round the corner to Trinity Gardens. "We just ran out of space" says Laybourne. "We needed to expand the business, push it forward and Queen Street couldn't give us that" he adds.

Having moved the restaurant into the Ground Floor space of a newly developed office complex in the heart of the Quayside area, Laybourne and the team have been able to increase capacity and provide a modern chic restaurant / bar and dining environment with a capacity of up to 140+ covers on a busy weekend period.

As part of the project a complete new kitchen was installed. At the centre of this is an Athanor island suite. "My whole thought process has changed from when we first started working with Athanor" comments Laybourne. "I'd seen plancha cooking in France and we initially embraced it when we installed Athanor at Jesmond Dene. Now three projects have been completed with Athanor you can see the vision we have today... it's a product that consistently delivers...."
