Case Study

Set over two floors 'Custom House' has established itself as one of 'the' dining venues in Copenhagen. The building is the old Custom House set on the quayside which after several years of planning delays, has been redeveloped to create an international dining experience.

On the ground floor is a main brasserie and bar area, with a feature Italian restaurant at the other end of the building. On the first floor is an Oriental restaurant and function / private dining rooms for corporate entertaining.

The site has three kitchens in which five (5) Athador suites are installed. The Main Kitchen at first floor level features two suites, one large wall suite for the main brasserie and one smaller suite for the banqueting operation. The oriental kitchen has a small wall suite and the main Italian restaurant has two peninsular suites.

The flexibility of design meant that Athador could manufacture suites for each kitchen, which have different requirements, by using a mixture of traditional gas solid tops / radiant hobs / 'Plaque Athador' and multi-cookers.
